News & Notes From The Club

Wilderness First Aid

The Catskill 3500 Club will be running its usual Wilderness First Aid Course (SOLO Certified) this spring on Saturday and Sunday, April 23rd and 24th at the Catskill Center in Arkville. This is a valuable course for both hike leaders and regular hikers and we are lucky that John Kascenska can instruct again. You can see his considerable experience at:

<http://www.kamountainguides.com/about.html>

More information on what the class involves is at:

<http://soloschools.com/wilderness-first-aid-wfa/>

We will give first priority to current and potential hike leaders and then any extra room will be opened up to club members or aspirants. For those considering leading for the club, we are offering an incentive: 75% of the class costs will be refundable after you have been approved for leading and have led 4 hikes in 2 years.

Please contact Maria Bedo (maria1bedo@gmail.com) or Heather Rolland (haliagrace@hotmail.com) for further information or to register.

Summit Steward Program

Some of you may have noticed the summit stewards on Slide this past season. This was made possible by a partnership between the NYNJTC, the NYSDEC, and the 3500 Club.

For the past several years, we have seen an increasing number of hikers using the Catskill High Peaks. It appeared many of the new hikers were unfamiliar with how to hike safe and lacking what good wilderness ethics were, such as LNT. Many hikers were having problems and an increasing number of the summits were experiencing some sort of degradation.

The Burroughs Range, with Slide being a popular destination point for many of these new hikers, seemed

The President's Column

As I sat looking out the window and watching the heavy rain wash away the three inches of snow we finally had gotten, it brought to mind how this changing weather can and has affected our mountains.

Glancing through back editions of the Canister I came across a perfect example. The 1969 winter edition recounts the formation of the slide on the northeast flank of Friday Mountain. The article was written by Rev. Ray L. Donahue.

It had been raining for nearly a week and on May 29, 1968 the record reading for the day was 4.88" in West Shokan. At 11am Nelson Shultis, owner of Wittenberg Lumber, was just finishing loading logs in Moonhaw Hollow. He and the truck driver were wet, muddy, and unhappy and only thinking of dry cloths and a hot cup coffee when the water in the stream turned into chocolate pudding rushing past them. He knew instantly what happened.

The ridge rising out of Moonhaw is a giant semicircle made up of four of our major peaks: Balsam Cap, Friday, Cornell and Wittenberg. The terrain is extremely rugged and steep, the perfect stage for the formation of a slide. As the storm passed and clouds cleared "a 2,300' scar with a vertical rise of 1,000' was unveiled." Mr. Shultis and his crew were the first to investigate the slide track.

For those of you who enjoy exploring new avenues and are not concerned with exposure, checking out that slide may be for you. It definitely is challenging and will be even more so during our present weather conditions, which seem to change daily.

Before going out make sure you are prepared for the worst. The conditions this winter are definitely difficult. At lower elevations the ground may be bare but don't let that fool you into thinking you can leave your traction

*A Note from our Conservation Chair,

MARK YOUR CALENDAR:

On May 14 at 1:00 PM at the Catskill Interpretive Center on Route 28, Mt. Tremper, Mark Whitmore will discuss invasive species that kill hemlock and ash trees—the Hemlock Woolly Adelgid and the Emerald Ash Borer. Jennifer Dean of the DEC will train in the use of iMapInvasives, a program for reporting invasive species to the state database and how to use advanced mapping features.

These two insects are controlled biologically—a long-term, sustainable solution to invasive species. Tiny stingless wasps lay their eggs in the borer's larvae, killing the insect, and only that insect is targeted. Small beetles are predators of the adelgid. The Environmental Protection Fund, which supports this vital work, is securing more funding.

The iMapInvasives App

At the CIC on May 21 at 1:00 PM, Dan Snider of the Catskill Regional Invasive Species Partnership will offer a workshop and field training dealing with identification and reporting these two insects. The 3500 Club can be very helpful in this important cause, being in the woods often and in many locations.

Before this meeting on May 21, join training on how to control/eradicate Hemlock Woolly Adelgid from 10:00 AM to noon at the Mountain Top Arboretum on County Route 23C north from Tannersville, before the junction of Routes 25A/23C. The Arboretum features many beautiful, exotic trees from all over the world and many hiking trails.

to be bearing the brunt of the invasion: illegal camping, fires, cutting, large amounts of litter and scores of uneducated people on any weekend.

The 3500 Stewardship Committee came up with the idea of placing stewards on some of the summits, similar to the program that has been in place in the Adirondacks for many years. We soon realized we could not manage the program ourselves and approached the NYNJTC, who could. They came up with a plan and submitted it to the DEC, who approved it. The problem was funding. The NYNJTC and the DEC had no extra monies available. That's where you, as a club, come in. After much debate, the 3500 Executive Board decided to invest $5000 to put 2 stewards on the summit of Slide Mountain to educate and help hikers for the 2015 season. This was referred to as "seed" money, with the idea that the program would be successful and grow. It was hoped that other groups would see this as a viable program and contribute in the future.

Despite a late start, training glitches and a few other minor issues, the program ran between Memorial Day and Columbus Day, with 2 stewards alternating weekends. It was seen as a success: many hikers were spoken to, the summit was much cleaner, and instances of illegal camping, fires and cuttings were reduced. This was because the stewards were there to educate.

It has been decided to continue and expand the program this season. Other groups have been donating, it is planned to cover Slide again, as well as some other non summit high use areas, such as Kaaterskill Falls.

The Stewardship Committee believes our money should be reserved for the high peaks and is again putting a motion to the Board to fund additional stewards on Wittenberg and Cornell this coming season to preserve the summits from further damage and to educate hikers there. We are hoping that as this program grows and becomes more solid, that eventually volunteer stewards could be used as well as paid stewards and the program spread to other peaks.

Rambles and Brambles: Hike Schedule April — June 2016

Assumed Risk: Hiking involves certain inherent risks and persons participating do so at their own risk. In cool weather, hike participants should avoid cotton clothing, as it retains dampness and the resulting chill can result in hypothermia, which can lead to death. Instead, wear (and have available in your pack) garments of wool or fleece. Silk or polypropylene make the best base layers, as they tend to wick moisture away from the body. Hats, gloves, and a headlamp must be part of the standard early spring kit. Ice and snow can still be found unexpectedly in these peaks. In early spring, if there is any doubt about the conditions that may be encountered, each hiker is strongly advised to bring snowshoes and full crampons to the trailhead; the leader may advise that these do not have to be taken on the hike, but be aware that while there may be bare ground at the trailhead, there is often very significant ice and snow as the elevation increases, which could result in those improperly prepared being sent back. Anyone not properly equipped may be refused permission to participate, at the leader's absolute discretion. Don't be seduced by buds on the trees at the trailhead, early spring in the Catskills is not to be treated lightly.

Rating System: Please be advised that the hikes listed herein would most likely be rated more difficult by clubs who hike in non-mountainous terrains

Membership Chair Message

Membership dues or subscription renewals for 2016 are due. If you have not yet climbed all the peaks, you are an aspirant and the renewal should be sent to Mike Dwyer. If you have been assigned a number, you are a member and dues should be sent to Dave White. Dues/renewals are on a calendar year basis. If you joined mid-year, a partial year renewal can get you back on track. Each quarter you will receive an email when the Canister is available (even if you elected to receive a paper copy.) The message will indicate your dues status. Additional member items are available for purchase; see the online dues form for pricing.

Below you can see that your club supports a number of projects that we believe are in the best interests of the hiking community. We do that with the contributions that members make. Life Members and Life Aspirants who opt for electronic delivery of their Canister, also provide funds; originally there were reserves set aside for postage and printing. I want to acknowledge a substantial gift that we have recently received. Many members of NY Sansaram, and other Korean hiking clubs have joined as Life Member/Aspirants, but in addition to those, $1,140 was recently received from the "Wednesday" contingent of their club. All of us thank you.

In the past few years we have supported the following programs: Catskill Firetower Project, Catskill Community Trails Fund, Adirondack Mountain Club for trailwork in the Catskill Preserve and state advocacy on behalf of the Catskills, NYNJTC for Summit Stewards, Catskill Interpretive Center, and the Catskill Heritage Alliance. Thank you!

My Adirondacks—a book review:

By Kevin Morgan, #2032, Editor of the Catskill Canister

Recently I was sent a book to review for The Catskill Canister by Erik Schlimmer. The book is, “My Adirondacks: Ten Stories from Twenty Years” (ISBN 978-0-9891-9962-9).

The book is, as the title suggests, an assortment of Erik’s hiking experiences spanning his adventures beginning at age 16 in 1989 when he and his friend Joey decided to bushwhack and camp overnight on top of 1,370 foot high Remington Mountain in early November of that year, and concluding with the tale of how he came up with the idea for a Trans Adirondack route (which he’s also written a book about—see note at the end of this article) which he finally embarked on in July of 2010.

This book is well written and Erik has a great flare for communicating the beauty of his surroundings and his love of the outdoors. I especially liked the tales from his time as an assistant forest ranger in the Adirondack Park’s Western High Peaks. In one he describes having several run-ins with a somewhat aggressive bear that was loitering in the area of a shelter where a group was staying. After several encounters with the bear he later sets up camp near the lean-to to keep watch in case he returned—and he did. With the campers in the shelter asleep and the bear’s tenacity, Erik decided to hang out inside the lean-to in case he got an opportunity to give him a good scare. His description of the bear’s breathing and fur rubbing against the shelter as he sat quietly next to the sleeping campers was quite vivid. I could almost smell the bear’s breath myself. As the bear’s snout (with very white teeth) came around the side of the shelter he let out a loud scream and scared the bear all the way to Canada! Amazingly, the campers never woke up.

Another story tells the tale of his deciding on a bushwhack of Van Dorrien Mountain, starting off in the wrong place and ending up on top of Ampersand Mountain.

I enjoy reading stories about hiking and mountaineering. When I first began reading about hiking it was with Bill Bryson’s “A Walk in the Woods” which got me all psyched to hike the Appalachian Trail. Enthusiasm, when it’s conveyed well in story form, is contagious, especially if one is inexperienced in the activity being so lovingly described. Reality is different for each of us and I quickly discovered that while I do love to hike I do not love, or even like, to camp. I also don’t enjoy hikes that lack views or are difficult just for the sake of being difficult. I don’t like to be wet or cold to the point of misery and so when hanging around with other hikers who are describing what to them was an awesome tale of survival and grit, I am making a mental note to never do that hike or visit that region.

Many of Erik’s experiences are like that. He loves to bushwhack and by the gaps in his tales I can tell that most of them are in the category of arduous to insane. He is also a member of that group of hikers known as peak baggers, having climbed all the Northeast’s 770 mountains over 3,000 feet with more than 400 of those being bushwhacks!

I think anyone who’s been working on climbing all of the Catskill 3500’s will enjoy reading this book. I’ve also been looking into some of Erik’s other books to read.

From Amazon.com’s author bio: Erik Schlimmer is also the author of “Thru Hiker’s Guide to America” (2005), “Blue Line to Blue Line” (2013), and “History Inside the Blue Line” (2014). He has also written for national periodicals including Canoe and Kayak, Mountain Biking Magazine, and National Geographic Adventure. As a former educator for the State University of New York, Erik is three-time recipient of this university system’s Merit Award for Teaching and their Outstanding Instructor of the Year Award. An accomplished adventurer, he has hiked more than 10,000 miles, mountain biked more than 10,000 miles, climbed 1,500 peaks, and slept outside more than 1,000 nights.

A Student-Hiker's Remembrance— Spring, 1966

Dana Helsley, #38 & 6W

"#27¹ sponsors a hiking club in the high school where he teaches. Several of the students have nearly finished the 3500." (From the "Peripatetic Porcupine" - The Catskill Canister - Winter 1968, Vol. 1, No. 1; Page 3)

Two years before #2 mimeographed the first edition of the Canister and included the above, and approximately four months prior to #16 leading the first 3500 Club hike over Giant Ledges and Panther, #27 organized three day trips for his high school students during the spring semester of 1966. The first one was Hunter in April, the second to Slide in May, and a third trip over Blackhead, Black Dome, and Thomas Cole was scheduled. Now, in the interest of full disclosure, this remembrance begins with the third as I missed the first two hikes for whatever reasons 9th Graders do or don't do things, but a good report from a classmate who had attended the Hunter trip piqued my interest. After all, how difficult could this be? So I signed up, as did nearly forty of my schoolmates (including eight future 3500 Club members) before the English teacher removed the attendance list from his school desk.

The forecast for that first Saturday in June of fifty years ago was for sunny skies and temperatures in the eighties—a continuation of a very dry spring in the Catskills. The calm of the unusually warm morning air at the end of Big Hollow Road was broken by teenagers chaotically disembarking from a school bus while #27 attempted a pre-hike orientation, remarkably, about fifty feet away from the dry streambed of Batavia Kill. Unfortunately for some, a warning about conservation of water on a day forecast to be hot was missed in the clamor to get started up the trail, and several students had already begun to meander in a southeasterly direction along the roadway before the meeting was concluded. With an impressive burst of speed, #27 commandeered the lead from members of the high school's track team, and without much more warning, my first Catskill hike was suddenly underway and the more—or less—athletically inclined were being sorted along the trail by walking speed.

As a novice, the peak-bagging phenomenon was an unknown to me, and much less a priority than my worries about getting lost and eaten by a bear before lunchtime! As such, I suspected being somewhere in the middle of this long queue stretching along the pathway as being best for wild animal avoidance, at least the odds would be with me. I sincerely tried to maintain my station, but after about fifteen minutes several of those ahead were stopping to drink water or remove clothing and I passed them by. Anyway, in this short time I had already deduced that no self-respecting bear would dare approach a group making that much of a racket, no matter how hungry it was. It was easy to follow all the noise ahead and after another half-hour it eventually guided me to a spot where I saw #27 talking to several resting students. I was going to stop for a rest myself, but he pointed uphill to the right and said that a steep mile was ahead and for me not to go beyond the next trail junction until he got there, so I kept moving.

Now I was climbing up a much rougher pathway alone, and I was only occasionally hearing others ahead and behind. Some time and a couple rest stops later, I was more than a little surprised when I broke out onto a relatively level part of the trail and came face-to-face with the group of student athletes that had been in the lead. All were suffering from little available shade and no breeze, coupled with the hot sun and heavy air making the catching of one's breath difficult. When #27 and a half-dozen more hot and sweaty students arrived a few minutes later, I was very pleased to be included among the lead group directed to continue on—anything to get off that sultry summit!

My group of fast-movers crossed over that surprisingly long top and then descended into the next col very quickly, and it seemed only fifteen minutes had passed when we came upon the next trail junction where we had been told to wait. The shade made resting here a little more pleasant than on Blackhead, but hardly ten minutes had passed when #27 and some more students showed up. Wasting no time, he asked if everyone thought they had enough water to tackle Black Dome. Absent any replies, he immediately started uphill with members of the rested track team on his heels—but the entire group strung out quickly this time as the increasing temperature was taking its toll. I passed by a few resting schoolmates on the way up yet another steep section, and was about to stop for a rest and drink when it suddenly leveled out. I walked across the top of Black Dome until I came upon a few sweat-soaked students lying on some rocks, breathing heavily. Seated on another rock some distance away, and seemingly calm and collected, #27 was eating his lunch! I was more thirsty than hungry, and one of my two canteens was already empty, but I thought lunch was probably a good idea so I followed suit.

Again, not much shade was available and the uncomfortable minutes passed slowly while more exhausted students made the summit, and then, surprisingly, one of the other faculty advisors arrived. He took a head count and I overheard him tell #27 that over twenty students were on their way down with the third chaperone, and except for a couple still behind him, it seemed everyone was accounted for. #27 then asked if any of those that had made it this far wanted to continue over to Thomas Cole, or was everyone ready to call it a day and return to the parking area. It was apparent that near empty canteens combined with the heat and humidity was becoming a problem for many of the students, and all but a few ended up slowly heading back.

Those of us continuing left our schoolmates on Black Dome for Thomas Cole, with #27 in the lead. He paced our small group to keep everyone together for the relatively short and not quite so steep walk. Just like the two before it, that third summit was also very warm and during the brief rest stop I recall #27 saying we were getting short on time and that he hoped we would not meet any stragglers when we got back to Black Dome. But the summit was empty when we arrived the second time that day and the trail was clear as we made another quick descent into the col. When there, #27 only slowed briefly to be sure we all turned downhill, and I heard him say it was a little less than two miles to the parking area. He then picked up his pace for the next mile or more, and only reduced his speed when he came upon a pair of hot and tired students headed slowly down the pathway. Regardless of fatigue, now it was our turn to show him some pace as we quickly caught up and hiked on by. I recall he laughed loudly as we passed, and then he yelled for us to take a left at the next junction! Additional returning schoolmates were just ahead, and not much further along we came upon the third chaperone waiting just above the red and yellow trail junction. He asked where #27 was and who we had seen on the way down, and seemed pleased by our answers. He pointed the way out, and fearing that #27 might catch us, we left immediately!

A few minutes later, our hot and exhausted group walked into the parking area. Almost immediately we were descended upon by a couple dozen hungry and thirsty teenagers who were anxious to be leaving as soon as they could! Several of them questioned how far we had gotten, what took so long, did I have any water left, who was still up on the trail, how far back they were, where #27 was, and how long before all of them would be getting to the bus. Most of their canteens had been empty for a while and were just as dry as Batavia Kill, where a couple of students were unsuccessfully digging around its smooth rocks for some signs of drinkable water. Getting on the waiting school bus offered little benefit as there was shade but no breeze, and even with all the windows open the inside felt like an oven and smelled like a locker room. Over the next half-hour, twos and threes of stragglers came off the trail, and each of them faced the same interrogations as we had! Almost an hour later, the welcome sight of the last three missing students being escorted out by #27 and the third chaperone came into view. The bus was loaded and running by the time they got aboard and with another quick counting of heads, finally began moving west with the breeze giving some relief from the heat and the smell. The ordeal was almost over, and the return ride home was very quiet. While I didn't know it at the time, I had just tallied my first three required peaks. What I did know, however, was that I swore I would never sign up again for any day trips where #27 was involved!
